

Graeme Leak

Performer, Artist & Creative Producer

(sound, media, and public-facing projects)

Professional Profile

Graeme Leak is a performer, artist, and creative producer whose career spans performance, events, education, sound, and content production across cultural, public-facing, and media contexts. Over several decades he has successfully delivered complex projects within theatres, festivals, public programmes, studios, and educational settings, developing strong editorial judgement, practical technical skills, and an instinctive understanding of how creative work functions within organisations.

His artistic practice is rooted in performance and large-scale participatory work, supported by extensive experience in sound design, audio and video production, image processing, layout, and copywriting. Graeme is a confident and engaging communicator, highly comfortable presenting, facilitating discussions, and representing work publicly — whether addressing small teams or large audiences — and is known for bringing clarity, ease, and good humour into the room.

Now seeking a contained, employment-based role within a competent and respectful team, Graeme is motivated by being useful day-to-day and contributing to shared outcomes. He works well within established structures, responds clearly to briefs, and supports creative leadership with focus and professionalism. He is open to office-based or hybrid working and brings flexibility to support occasional external professional commitments where appropriate.
